HOUSE SIFTING COMMITTEE BEGINS WORK

Senate Finally Passes the Dispensary Bill with Amendment that Present Laws Continue Till It Takes Effect.

PIERRE, S. D., Feb. 27 - (Special Telegram.)—The house sifting committee pre-sented its first report Monday morning, recommending four senate bills and twentytwo house bills for consideration. Representative Purdin, in an attempt to place the fusion members on record against Aberdeen for Bluefields. and Watertown normal measures, offered a resolution endorsing the action of Governor NICHOLAS FIRM ON THE THRONE. Lee in vetoing those bills. His desire was to force the fusionists to declare themselves before any action could be taken on the Aberdeen bill, which was near the head of the sifting committee calendar. short skirmish a motion to defer action on the resolution for one day carried.

A resolution by Johnson of Brown was adopted limiting debate to five-minute speeches. The senate general appropriation bill was taken up and the house bill substltuted and passed. The Aberdeen bill was then passed by a vote of 52 to 32.

The house this afternoon continued action on bills, passing a new revenue bill, which had come up from the senate, but not by a sufficient vote to make it an emergency measure. #### GOVERNMENT PLATS MUST STAND. Important Land Decision is Rendered in South Dakota.

YANKTON, S. D., Feb. 27 .- (Special.) Judge E. G. Smith of the First judicial circuit has just returned from Parker where was settled a question of the greatest importance to land owners in South Dakota. The case was that of Cope Brothers against Frederika Eckert, in a suit brought to fix the ownership of twenty-five acres of land. The jury decided that the official plat and field notes of the United States surveyors are to be considered the sole authority in adjusting boundaries. Numerous cases are to be found in the more thickly settled sections of the state where the mounds and corners placed by government surveyors have in some manner been moved, and eventually the owners of land that adjoin find themselves involved in a dispute as to where the corners really are located. For instance, a man supposes that he is owner of 160 acres, a civil engineer is employed to survey his farm and finds it to contain less than the 160 acres, but nevertheless the corners or mounds are in evidence that his supposition was correct, while the man whose land adjoins, and who has more than 160 acres, insists that the corners are correct. Then arises the question of the government survey. This Turner county case has decided that the government intended that each quarter section should contain the full 160 acres, and that whether the corners or mounds have been moved or not the plats and field notes of the government must stand

NOTE-The author of this communication is entitled to the benefit of any denials or The Bee. It must be remembered, however, that the present avowed purpose of the state association and the purpose of its criginal organizers are not necessarily identical. The Bee has never had any sympathy with blackmailing lawyers or blackmailing news papers or blackmailers of any kind. I loubts, however, whether the hange in the law offers the desired bar to blackmailing shysters.

em astrated in due time. The Bee is glad to be informed that the liquor dealers are now satisfied with existg legal provisions respecting publication license notices. The resurrected bill referred to was introduced into the last legi: ing interests. That there is no reason why any liquor dealer should support it is plain, but that does not alter the fact that some of them have been trying to push it through paid agents and representatives. If the li-quor dealers simply obey the law relating to license publication as it is they will have smooth sailing. The Bee's attitude toward the men engaged in the liquor traffic needs no ex-planation. Were it not for this paper and its editor Nebraska would today be a pro emies and against himself when he has allowed himself to be used against his own

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27 .- When the army court of inquiry into the beef charges met today after its two days' recess it expected to begin the examination of some of the ensix refugee Nicaraguans, who were enroute listed men of the army who had not only seen the beef furnished the army in the field, but had eaten it in quantities, wherein they differed from most of the officers who had previously testified. The enlisted men were slow in arriving, however, and the first witness was Lieutenant Charles F. Dwyer, respondent at Darmstadt, capital of the Ninth Infantry, now at Madison barracks. roast beef. After the capture of Santiago witness was stationed altogether in the city and his command getting the refrigerated beef early in the day, it was always fresh and good and he heard no complaints as to its quality. He had made no report on the beef after duty to do so, except under orders. He had been made sick on one occasion by eating canned roast beef stew, but otherwise his health had not suffered.

Brigadier General Robert D. McFeeley, who was commissary general of subsistence from 1875 to 1890, testified that during his service he had recommended the introduction of a regular travel ration, with a view to bettering the condition of the soldiers. Prior to that the men often had suffered on long trips in trying to live for several days on what was then known as the "cooked ration." which usually consisted of bread and meat, without even coffee. Colonel Davis read the records referring

This was his reason for selecting them. His recollection was that general ration, not because the men did not like it, but because it lacked keeping qualities, especially in hot weather.

Regarding the fresh meat supply in the civil war, General McFeely said it was usu ally obtained from a herd of cattle driven with the army, either by the government or by centractors. At the time of his retirement from office he said he thought about two-thirds of the army was supplied with beef on the block rather than on the

Not a dollar was paid by the change from straight bacon," said the old general with a smile, "and nobody who did not know it was horse would have had any criticism to make."

The witness was not willing to say definitely whether it was

Effect on Soldiers' Health

After getting into the city, where the refrigerated beef was issued, the men continued to be very sick. They were nauseated and suffered from bowel trouble. The sergeant thought this also came from the refrigerated meat; the gravy especially that came from the refrigerated meat seemed to nauseate the men even more than the meat itself. Returning to the canned beef, witness said a can would not keep more than four hours after opening. He said also corrections he may make to statements in that the can was an inconvenient package to carry in the haversack with the rest of the ration. In quantity the ration was frequently short. Witness had a book in which shortage of rations had been noted. This noted a particular shortage on June 39, on going into action, when haversacks were hish was really the guilty person. Then thrown away.

Sergeant Buckage, also of the Ninifa, was called. He gave the proportion of canned roast beef in the travel ration as two days out of ten, with eight days' canned corned beef. He testified that the men did not like and they did not eat it when they could get anything else. On shore, before the surrender, about half the meat ration was canned roast beef, and the same complaints continued. Each man did his own cooking in his mess tin or in empty cans, though many ate their canned beef from the can. Nothing done to the beef in the way of preparation seemed to have much effect. Coming to the refrigerator beef Buckage said that there was little or no complaint while at Santiago. After the regiment got out of the town about half of the beef spoiled n transit. What was left, after trimming off the spoiled part, was considered quite good. Sergeant White of the Ninth infantry was the first witness this afternoon. He was very dogmatic in his statement that all the canned roast beef in the compaign was bad. It developed that he had opened only one can himself. That was bad and he threw it away. He had seen other men do the same, but he did not recollect ever seeing a good of it was tainted. Sergeant Casey of the Ninth infantry had the same general story to tell of the beef on ship and on shore. When he said that the canned roast beef was ill-smelling Colonel Davis had the orderly open a can of roast beef that had been sent to Porto Rico and back. Witness smelled and handled it and said it did not look like the beef served to him in Cuba.

The campaign article was liquid, oily and repulsive in odor. Asked if this might not be accounted for by the climate, witness said he would not undertake to guess. The refrigerator beef he had in Santiago was good, but outside of town the meat was buried four days out, often as soon as it reached camp. The enlisted men were ordered to report at 2 o'clock tomorrow. The recorder said he could not say what witnesses would be heard tomorrow morning.

Prof. Wittehof had discovered poison in the contents of the bottle, and as soon as it was possible for the district attorney's office to go ahead it did so.

Method of Prosecution.

"In consequence of the publicity which the case was given," continued Mr. Gardner, "certain persons became suspicious and were put on their guard. Certain methods therefore had to be adopted to disarm suspicion. The first witness who was placed on the stand (Cornish) was made to suspect that he was the guilty party, and the evidence he gave was the evidence of a man full of consternation. But in this direction we disarmed suspicion from the really guilty person. Now the very next man to go on the stand (Molineaux) was the person that the public had settled upon.

"How the community reached this conclusion is a question. When this witness was called and my able assistant treated him in such an apologetic manner, it was done to disarm him of suspicion.
